PublicSchoolWORKS Offers Free Safety Resources as Part of New Website Design

New navigation gives customers better access to detailed information

Cincinnati, Ohio – December 16, 2009 –The newly redesigned PublicSchoolWORKS (PSW) website offers educators free resources for making schools safe working and learning environments, as well as better navigation to find information about PublicSchoolWORKS' multiple staff and student programs. PSW is the one and only comprehensive, fully automated, risk management system available for schools today.

Free resources on the site include webinars designed to help schools address safety issues and find time-saving and cost effective solutions to safety challenges affecting schools, links to other safety resources, as well as other safety information. The interactive interface and streamlined navigation help potential and current customers find information fast.

Other features on the website include a calendar of events, a news center with articles about PSW programs, case studies, information on product awards, and a custom proposal application for new districts to request a targeted safety management plan designed to meet the specific needs of the district.

"With our redesign, we wanted to engage potential customers in a more customized fashion. Our new site lets us do just that," Tom Strasburger, Vice President of PublicSchoolWORKS.
