PublicSchoolWORKS Successfully Graduates from Greater Cincinnati Area Incubator Program

Education technology company continues growth with new, larger location and expanded hiring

Cincinnati, OH – January 15, 2010 – PublicSchoolWORKS, the one and only comprehensive, fully-automated risk management system available for schools today, has graduated this past August from the greater Cincinnati area business incubator program housed at the Hamilton County Business Center.

The Hamilton County Business Center offers start-up businesses low-cost loans and grants, business counseling and office space for low or no rent. Funding for the center comes from the state's Ohio Edison Technology Program. PublicSchoolWORKS, now in its ninth year of business, was founded by a former school administrator who was determined to create a better and faster way to meet the many safety requirements and regulations placed on schools. The company started with the EmployeeSafe Suite, a suite of online tools for automating the management of employee and building safety in individual schools and districts, including more than 130 safety training courses delivered 24/7. They most recently developed the StudentWatch Suite, a suite of tools that track and report on student safety and behavior issues. In addition, educators can reward positive behaviors through the system. The suite also offers a 24/7 telephone and email hotline for students to report bullying and other safety concerns involving themselves or others. And, the system includes a student accident reporting system which manages the reporting and tracking of accidents and recognizes trends to reduce future accidents.

“It’s been an exhilarating couple of years for PublicSchoolWORKS as we have grown to a position of domination in Ohio and branched out to acquire customers around the country and in Canada,” said PublicSchoolWORKS’ vice president, Tom Strasburger. “We have moved to larger office space, are adding staff and continue down our path for providing unsurpassed support of school administrators safety needs!”
